THE NATURE OF A PERFECT SHOT

WILDLIFE PHOTOGRAPHER TODD GUSTAFSON

ONE OF THE FIRST THINGS YOU NOTICE

watching wildlife photographer Todd Gustafson's stunning photography dance across the screen is how close to the action he is able to get. In To the Ends of the Earth: East Africa, premiering Wednesday, November 21 at 9 p.m. on CPTV, Gustafson explains that, "being in the right place at the right moment is key to capturing the story."

But it's more than just good fortune that leads to such breathtaking photos. For 20 years, Gustafson has been leading photo safaris to East Africa. He grew up in Tanzania, the son of two missionaries. His father, later a photographer, zoologist, and biologist, instilled in his son a love of the East African landscape and the many creatures that live there.

Decades later, Gustafson regularly photographs the life-and-death, day-to-day existence of these creatures, including zebras, giraffes, elephants, and more. His camera lens captures the dramatic moment of a kill, the touching image of a mother lovingly grooming her young, the tense standoff between two males as they fight over a mate, and the heart-stopping instance as a mother gives birth to a new offspring while wondering if a predator is on the hunt nearby.

He classifies these interactions as "life moments" and insists that they happen in both the human and animal worlds. "What I want to do is engage the viewer in what might be called the human condition, but in nature," Gustafson says. In a set of photos featuring a newborn baby elephant crossing a river, for example, his mother and other adult elephants flank him in order to ward off danger. According to Gustafson, this is a "life moment," and it's easy to picture the same maternal instincts in humans.

In order to make "photographic sense of these seemingly random events," Gustafson uses his deep knowledge of animal behavior to anticipate what each creature's next move will be. For instance, Gustafson usually travels to Tanzania in February to capture the migration of wildebeest in the Serengeti, resulting in astonishing photographs illustrating the power of the annual event.

Most of us will never experience first-hand the wonders of East Africa, one of the last wild places on Earth. However, through a photographer's lens, we can enjoy the incredible landscape of East Africa and the amazing creatures that inhabit it.

To the Ends of the Earth: East Africa* premieres Wednesday, November 21 at 9 p.m. on CPTV.
